Purpose

This is the sixth gathering of senior Intelligence Community managers that I have convened to discuss matters of common concern at an off-site location. I continue to find these sessions very useful as a means of focusing Community attention on especially important issues, as well as a way of encouraging a free exchange of ideas. The complexities of the challenges that face the Community, along with the constraints imposed by fiscal realities, place a premium on informed decisionmaking. Conferences such as this help ensure the best possible common understanding as we make those decisions.

The theme for this conference is my agenda for 1987. I have chosen a number of topics that I believe will be of paramount importance in the next year. They represent a broad set of concerns, but they are tied together by a common thread of difficult issues and significant resource implications. I look forward to getting your best thinking as we move through the discussions.

William J. Casey
